Representational photo: Shaheed Bhagat Singh (File Photo) SRINAGAR: When not misusing the electoral card against their rivals, the party workers in some regions of Kashmir celebrate each other's success. This mostly happens in local bodies polls. There, they forget for a moment, why they are doing politics. Usually young and bearded men with fondness for sloganeering and some athleticism with a halo round their heads, they bond over their success in achieving the party's target or scoring a goal in the electoral fight. A common characteristic is a vigour that they put in an almost impossible task of winning elections. "Bijli, rozgar and samiti elections are of crucial importance. It is only then that people realise how much we do to win the local polls," said one such worker. "The most important part of winning an election is getting the right people to win the election and the party workers work their butt off in ensuring that every seat is won by a party worker." A few days ago, the party workers even named a sports tournament after one of their leaders, who won from a local body in Jammu and Kashmir. Among those who look up to the party workers are the MLA Zulfikar Ali, who said the popularity of the workers in the mainstream part of Kashmir valley is immense. His own party workers celebrate his success in a cricket tournament every year, which they name after him. "The party workers are not just like the others. They are enthusiastic and fun-loving. They love the game of cricket and this year the cricket tournament was held at our own ground," said Zulfikar Ali. "They love to play cricket and celebrate each other's success." Coming from a film background, Zulfikar Ali said it is the party workers who help him keep his image intact. The party workers among the youth look up to him and attend his activities. "I don't have to do any extra work to have them around me," he said. Similarly, shopkeepers praise the party workers
